Fair Subject Selection and Susceptibility to Risk

Should subjects be excluded from participation in research if they are at higher risk of being harmed than other subjects? Or, is such exclusion an example of objectionable paternalism? Does it matter if subjects are at higher risk because of their religious beliefs? Doug MacKay will explore these questions by means of a case-based discussion.