

Clinical Ethics Grand Rounds

What Does Religion Have to Do With Medical Ethics?

Farr A. Curlin, MD

Josiah C. Trent Professor of Medical Humanities, Trent Center for Bioethics, Humanities and History of Medicine

Co-Director of the Theology, Medicine and Culture Initiative, Duke Divinity School

12:00 pm - 1:00 pm

Thursday, November 3, 2016

MacNider Hall 321

Lunch will be provided for first 50 people

All are welcome

Clinicians' religious characteristics may strongly shape practice, particularly with respect to morally controversial interventions. Religion-associated differences may then expose the limits of what we know as "medical ethics" and require us to look beneath the surface of clinical ethical disputes to examine the deeper disagreements that lead not only to arguments about which clinical interventions are ethical, but also to arguments about how one should do medical ethics in the face of such disagreements. Join us for this discussion of how religious traditions may call conventional assumptions and practices of medical ethics into question.

Jointly sponsored by the UNC Center for Bioethics and the UNC Hospital Ethics Committee, Clinical Ethics Grand Rounds offers an innovative and interactive forum for engaging with ethical, legal, and policy issues of particular salience to patient care within the hospital. There are no commercial support or conflicts of interest to report.

Attendees may receive certificates of attendance for their professional education records, but no CEUs will be offered for this session.